In the 1..... of the European immigration debate, a number of eminent personalities, led by 2..... German Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer, presented a report on May 11 called "Living Together: Combining Diversity and Freedom in 21st Century Europe". The message of the report is that 3..... Europe learns to cultivate its diversity, it will always inevitably be 4..... a demographic disadvantage. This is explained by a simple 5.....: without immigration, the active population will decline 6..... a hundred million people in the next fifty years, while the total population will increase and will age. Europe will 7..... have to open up to immigration and to societal diversity.

Immigrants cannot be asked to leave their identity at the border. According to the group, which 8..... Javier Solana, Emma Bonino and Timothy Garton Ash, there is nothing 9..... with immigrants bringing their cultural baggage with them – 10..... they respect the law. Better 11....., the 12..... of new cultures can contribute to creativity, of which Europe is in 13..... need.

The message is a 14..... sell. It goes totally 15..... the grain of the populist approach which sees mass immigration as a threat. Joschka Fischer and his 16..... are calling on European leaders, not just in the 17..... of politics, but also in the culture, media and teaching professions, to rise up against these false prophets.

Fischer considers that politicians from the major mainstream parties who bow to populism are not fulfilling their 18..... as leaders. One after 19....., European leaders are lining up to lament that the multicultural society model has 20..... Fischer avoids this debate. He simply notes that in Europe, diversity is a reality that cannot be ignored.

U.S. naval dominance in the East and South China Seas by 3..... claims to islets and waterways from Japan to Vietnam, and all too often it 4..... exploration in areas believed to be rich in oil and gas.

Beijing's maneuvers 5..... a new security concern for leaders of countries whose economies 6..... ever more entwined with China's, even if they are politically closer to the U.S. They are unsettled by the ease with which trouble between the two major powers periodically 7.....

In what it calls a "pivot to Asia," the Obama Administration 8..... the last year 9..... regional military ties in tacit counterbalance to China's muscle-flexing. Last week the first of up to 2,500 Marines 10..... in northern Australia arrived in Darwin, and nearly 2,000 personnel stationed on Okinawa 11..... in joint military exercises in the Philippines next month.

Over 30 U.S. military bases 12..... onto Okinawa today. Locals may be fed up with the noise of military aircraft and social disruption that comes with a large population of young foreign males, but the local American bases still 13..... 9,000 local people. In fact many businesses 14..... long ago if it weren't for U.S. personnel and their families. Yet China's posturing is making disgruntled locals more willing to accept a U.S. presence on the island. "It's scary living so close to a military base," says shopkeeper Genji Sunakawa, "but as China 15....., the alternative might be even scarier."
